Carpet stair runners menards

Traprunners are so underrated – they can completely transform a simple staircase and help to define the overall look of a home. We have combed through our Livingetc.com archives to draw from some excellent stairrunner ideas. Traprunners are a classic staircase that for a reason; they add style while also picking up the sound of your family walking up and down, but why stop there? Find a design with a strong repeating pattern, such as a bold stripe, so that the runner can extend to wall-to-wall floor coverings on the hall or landings. Keep this look going by using paler shades of the same color in the rooms coming out of the space to create a cohesive theme in the floor of your home. As with the rest of the house, stair runner styles are a very personal thing. Below you will find rainbow runners, star-print runners, leopard print and even zebra print (yes, really) traprunners to arouse the appetite of the fat and the daring. Looking for a style to better suit a classic or elegant hall? Stripes are timeless – Roger Oates' designs are favourites here – as are plain stair runners. A bold carpet makes for an inviting first impression; take note of the home of interior designer Irene Gunter of Gunter & Co (figure 3), where the runner is paired with an abstract wall for a cool masterclass in clash. A red staircase carpet (as in Figure 2) will inject a pop of vibrancy to a neutral scheme, while a soft pink hue will achieve a more elegant look. A grey stairwell with a dark grey edge is a popular look for Victorian homes and traditional properties. In addition to protecting your basic equipment, a stair runner will reduce the noise. Look at sisal for the most wear-resistant option, or wool if you prefer something softer underfoot. A natural stair runner like a burlap or sisal creates a beautiful, textured and neutral look, while below there is even a leather stair runner and a stair runner made of silk – very luxurious underfoot, but probably quite tricky to keep clean. One for child and pet-free homes we think! Below there are trapwalk ideas for every taste...
